The Beauty of Wood

Wood is a naturally beautiful resource; rich in earthy tones creating a sense of warmth, depth and character. The intricacy of each tree interacts with the environment in which it grows; variations in soil, temperature and light infiltrates the wood in different ways thus creates contrasts in wood colour and grain. It has an aesthetic appeal and an exotic appearance; each species presents its own distinctive allure presenting the ultimate venetian blind.

Achieve enhanced temperature control in a home environment with the aid of wood insulation properties. Wood cell walls act as tiny air traps that resist the transfer of heat, keeping your home fresh in the summer months and warm in the winter.

Eco Sustainability

Central to the Timberlux brand is a strong commitment to the environment in which we operate, source and craft our blinds. It is important to us that the wood that we use in our blinds comes from sustainably managed forests, ensuring minimal impact on the ecosystems in which they grow.

A bamboo tree is able to completely regenerate itself after 5 years, helping to prevent soil erosion. It absorbs 4 times the amount of carbon dioxide that forests are capable of, and in addition, produces 35% more oxygen into our atmosphere.

Each Bamboo cane is carefully harvested, ensuring the root is preserved so that the tree can continue to grow without needing to be replanted after each harvest. Bamboo epitomises the greatness of nature; producing its own antibacterial agent means there is no requirement for the use of pesticides, which further enhances the environmental benefits of Bamboo.

Wood is not only the ideal material for interiors when it comes to its insulation properties, but trees also help to mitigate the effects of climate change. The importance of responsibly sourced raw materials cannot be overstated enough.

At Timberlux we make a point of sourcing our Basswood and Abachi from sustainable regions, ensuring peace of mind that the environment from which it is cut, is being cared for at the same time and is preserved for generations to come.
